LONDON, March 24.—In the House of Commons to-day, Mr. Mundella caused a deep sensation by moving the resolution that while the House approves the principle of the measure for the abolition of the system of purchasing commissions in the army, it believes that the army and navy can be made efficient without any increase of expenditure from ordinary estimates. Mr. Gladstone, in opposing the motion, detailed many arguments why, the House should reserve its judgment on the antithesis between the intention of the Government and its past conduct, and stated that the habitual economy of the Government and only suspended for the time by the pressure of exigencies of the late war. George Dixon and Jacob Bright, both, members from Birmingham, made speeches in cioquent denusciation of mibilsternal extravagance, and accusing the Government of having violated its piedges to the nation. In connection with the very appreciable reaction in England sentiment to which we have already alluded as likely to affect the labors of the Joint High Commission, there is one matter that deserves expectal.

labors of the Joint High Commission, there is one matter that deserves especial remark. It is the extremely filmsy and almost ridiculous character of the reasons which the Tory leaders themselves put forward to justify the change. The latest untermoces that we have noticed on the subject were those of Mr. ROEBUCK before his constituents at Sheffield. Their slengerness, when contrasted with their whomes the constituents and the subject were those of Mr. ROEBUCK before the subject when contrasted with their whomes the subject when the subject were the subject when the subject were the subject when the subject were the subject with the subject when the subject were the subject were the subject when the subject were the subject were the subject were those of Mr. ROEBUCK before the subject were t his constituents at Sheffield. Their sien-derness, when contrasted with their vehe-mence, is farcical. It would be unwise as well as upjust to the English to believe that their present veering away from us-springs from no deeper or better causes than those which they usign. There is not a people on the earth that knows its own collective mind, taking the word in a own collective mind, taking the word in a practical sense, so clearly as the British. The heartiness of their convictions, their The heartiness of their convictions, their tenacity of purpose, even the inveteracy of their prejudices, have become a proverb. Yet, paradoxical as it may seem, there is no nation on the earth that either knows tremes which lies at the very foundation of our modern civilization. She is the apt po-litical and social product of certain sublime and mighty ideas which have created all been a compromise between the principl of order and the principle of freedom— between aristocracy and democracy—each of which has at times acquired ascendancy, of which has at times acquired ascendancy, but has not held it. It is a long and shining course that stretches from our day back to the crossing over of the Norman tanner's son; but these two ideas, by their union and by their conflicts, have made it that in the past have made her grand and powerful. The two ideas on which her system is built have been developed s widely apart by the progress of societ that they can no longer be reconciled an bound together in one government. When England looks at the United States, the looks at Eastern Europe, she sees the other cquaily trumphant, while just across the channel is unhappy France swaying help-lessly back and forth between the two, a laughing stock to those who are too shal-low to understand and pity her condition.

The world is 100 small to contain these two ideas, each of which claims to be in sharply drawn severy day. Every nation

England will stay on the fence so long as she is England.
One consequence of this collision of ideas and moral forces, to which England is thus peculiarly exposed, is, naturally, great vacillation in the foreign policy of the country. When we read of the mutations of her domestic politics, of the putting out of the Tories and the putting in of the Whigs, it does not strike us that there is anything undignified or unseemly in the proceeding. We expect such vicinalitudes in the management of home affairs. But when a government pursues a hesitating and changeful policy towards other nations, when it seems to lack decision and constancy in its dealings with the great outside world, we feel that it is weak and pusillanimous. What it is that causes the pusilianimous. What it is that causes the wide difference of impression in the two cares we need not stop to inquire. Perhaps there is something of maccuracy in our judgment in both cases. At all events it is unjust to censure Mr. Glad-store, while we praise Earl Halipax and Mr. Haller. Men, whether great or no nation on the earth that either knows or cares so little about the reasons for its opinions as this same bluff and downright Britain.

The brilliant satirists of France have almed the keenest shatts of ridicale at this English peculiarity in its various forms. Some of the later English writers, Lord Machalla, among the humber have sleep small, are apt to act their parts in at best but a half-conscious way, not fully know-ing or understanding what it is they do, We consider it doubtful whether the Eng-lishmen who retired before ELEXARTH and quaked before HENRY VIII., or the Some of the later English writers, Lord MACAULAY among the number, have also taken it up, in a very serious and traly British manner, for comment and mitigation. The polished historian, we remember, takes occasion to congratulate his countrymen, as might have been expected, on the extreme pricipality and surrowness of their policies. first and the third EDWARD, loved li of CHARLES I. or met King John at Rus ferently placed and "bus than they knew." If Mr. GLADSTONE and p. ricularity and surrowness of their political thought, and to retainst on the witty and speculative French by prosy custions from their history. He has the best of the argument, but the French have the best of the setting. It was the that the wride. the High Commission should not do in all respects to suit us, let us at least be just in our criticisms, and try to understand the embarras they labor.

We repeat that a mere temporary and the satire. It may be that the pride of the satire. It may be that the pride of the English has something to do with the characteristic of which we are speaking.

A proud man is generally very careless and illogical in giving reasons for his conduct. Especially is he sketchy, technical and unsatisfactory when he attempts to explain his resentments or any point of honor. The fact that he is offended is clear enough; but why or how is another matter. It is not at all certain that what he complains of is the real ground of his anger; inpartial patching up of minor details is the largest measure of success that we antici-pate from Mr. Fish's wine-bibbing and gluttonous diplomacy.

kept up. Both moral and physical causes require its continuance. If part of the British people are democratic in sentiment another part are just the reverse. If Russis threatens India we threaten Canada. So the offsets are equal all round. CARLYLE and RUSKIN are at least a match for SWINBURNE and JOHN STUART MILL. England will stay on the fence so long as the tempolary.

How the Germans Used to Manage bonor. The fact that he is offended is clear enough; but why or how is another matter. It is not at all certain that what he complains of is the real ground of his anger; indeed, the presumption is rather the other way. Nations of a practical turn are as considerate of trifles near at hand and as indifferent to larger objects that are remote, as individuals of the like disposition. The prevailing public thought of Great Britain extends neither inward, like that of Germany, nor ultimately and in the main extends neither inward, like that of Germany, nor ultimately and in the main upward, like that of America, but simply outward, in the most common sense and unaspiring manner. Consequently, our trans-Atlantic kinsmen, being piqued at us, do not stop to find any large or dignified cause of quarrel with us, but lay hold of the readlest and most convenient accusation that they can hurl at us. The gravamen of this present charge against us is that we have not treated them with proper respect, and the ultra Tories have actually succeeded, by their belligerent talk, in persuading Father Bull to roll up his aleeves and shake his iat old fists at us. Surely, this is the very loudness of mellocation of the English people, we shall find an explanation of their uncreasing coldness and seeming aversion toward us, as exhibited within the last few weeks, that will not jar on our self-love, and certainly will with gravamental to the last few weeks, that will not jar on our self-love, and certainly will with gravamental selections.

Most readers will agree that the wond is as the learned writer, Herr Sugenheim says it is. BISMARCE, however, seems to have gotten bravely over the time honored German custom of doing nothing in the most dilatory and vexatious manner pos sible. We have seen no traces of its ob ervance during the late unpleasantn

The April number of this magazine opens with a paper on "Life in the Cannibal Islands," which is a continuation of an article whose first part appeared in the March number. Its chief merit is in the illustrations, that are very good and much superior to the accompanying text, which reads like an extract from a Gasateer. One of the best papers is an account of a visit to Alexandre Dunss, wherein the peculiarities of this well-known writer are skeiched with a free hand. Dunns is described as over six feet high and well proportioned, though some what inclined to complexion of the quadroon, the kinky-hair that no artifuce could straighten, a head low and narrow in front, but enlarging rapidly as it receded, and thick protunding lips. The writer of the article attempts to trace similar traits of the African in Dunna' habit of writing his manuscept without erasures and corrections, and asserts that this peculiarity shows the lack of reflective and logical isculties always to be noticed in the negro. But there were other features that the noveliat possessed not distinctively African. When the writer skeed Dunns if he spoke English with sufficient case to caloy a proposed vist to America, he nalvely answered, "Noo but my mistress is English, and she will trach me all that is needed." Walle they were ducussing the matter this bryen. John Jacob, Jr., and then to the latter's son, and so on to the latest generation.

On the borders of Texas, near the Rio Graude, there lived a man by the name of Nai K. Xulkuk, pronounced in the gutteral Maxican, Zulzus. He, 150, like the Bowles, was a desperado, but, unlike them, he fought against and depredated upon the American settlers. He is sull remembered in Texas by many who have seen and heary of thus, as well as dreaded him. His motto was to seek unceasingly to awaying a real or faneled wrong to himself, his followers, or his country. His name spelict bookwards gives us Kuklux Klan.—(Cor. in Chi. Rep.

Wale they were ducussing the matter this breve teacher of Ergüsh entered the room and was introduced to the visitor. She seemed about twenty, and, of course, good looking. She stated that she had given concerts in America; and showed a letter from a Mr. Thompson, of Cincinnati, to her, in which she was addressed as "Precloia." Our author had the daty—"honor" is the word he usee—of conducting this female to the breaktast to which he had been invited, and the whole party seem to have enjoyed their feast very well under the circumstances; for Dumss ate enormously, his breathing soon began to resemble the puffing of a high pressure engine, and disally his breathing soon began to resemble the puffing of a high-pressure engine, and finally he relapsed into a state of stertorous sommolency, which continued for a naif an tour. At the expiration of this time he roused up and made himself very entertaining by his rapid, 'cloquent and piquant conversation. Another article of interest is upon Children who Work, and describes the employments in which the children of the poor is new York find the slender means that helps them. In which the children of the poor in New York find the slender means that helps them keep the wolf from their door. Thorwaideen's Sacred Marbles, Discovery of Antique Silver, and the Fly Considered Microscopically, are the remaining illustrated articles. There is a pleasunt and instructive article on the Martyr Church of Madagascar, and a serious, thoughtist one upon the Anthracile Problem. Farther chapters of George MacDonaid's novel are given, and Hans Andersen's tale of Lucky Peer is concluded in this number. The poetry is sellight as usual, and some of the page as the close of the number are marked by no unusual depth; but what is said of Culture and Progress at Home and Abroad is very interesting and instructive.

once more Berlin breaks into a very delirium of joy.

The Emperor's despatch to the Empress arrived on the 2d, and next day at noon was read under circumstances of striking solemity, from the steps outside the palsec, just opposite the statue of Frederick the Great. At eleven o'clock all the Ministers and generals in Berlin (mostly a shabby old lot left, I believe) presented themselves to her Majesty. An immense crowd collected outside the palsec, All the windows near were filled with ladies and the flat roofs of the houses througed with spectators. He insisted that there was a peculiar look about Southerners which (we were epeaking in German) he called "illeder-liche," by which he claimed he could recognize them instantly. I cannot find an English word for this expression. He meant by it a Jose way of conduct, akin to what we understand by Freech habits. We were at the Louisville Hotel, and on my expressing some doubt about this matter he proposed to me to test it at once. He produced the injurie of this person from what Southern State he came. Un approaching him we were informed that he was from the State of New York, and on his way South to establish agencies for certain agricultural implements which he was manufacturing. A lively crossine in a large establishment, a lively crossine of letters was kept up between the two lovers. Among the yoluminous correspondance which was atterwards found there were billets which teemed with expressions of tender passion. The two lovers fairly exhausted the vecabulary of endearing terms, and, as it were, smothered one another with affection. This state of things lasted for some time. About two months ago the lady, he hasband and charmitz young daughter, who had the full-benefit of This REAUTIFUL MATERNAL EXAMPLE,

We report sales of Merchants' Sank stock, Falls City Bank stock, Louisville and, Anshville Rail, road stock, and some transactions in Short-line preferred stock. The bonds of this road are also very firm, with a fair demand.

The consolidated mortgage Louisville and Nashville Railroad bonds erjoy great favor with those persons who prefer a security double sure at a low rate of interest raiher than venture with less westibly corporations.

The demand for New Albany city bonds continues to increase, and nearly all parties who find their search for Louisville city bonds fruitiess make up their minds to tare the New Albany bonds, which are a much obseper investment.

contessant's chidrea would get more under the will than they would if it were set ander. But their object was to secure a judicial determination of the fact that their father was insane for nineteen years, and a taving maniac whist denouncing his children as theves and prostitutes. He referred to English and American decisions where it had been held that an insane douision as to one member of the testator's family—a crother for instance—was sufficient to set aside in the second of the second of the death-bed secone—the old man, a mental wirek, iting of his couch, the lawyer in an adoining room writing the so-called will, the executor plying back and forth, like a forty-boat, between the testator and the attorney, and Miss Joan Rosell busy prompting the composition of the document, and the disposition of the property. He related an anceote of a will-contest in Warren county, where one of the witnesses, an illiterate but candid old genitums, was, at last, under a close cross-examination, forced to admit that "while Mr. Jones binned writ the will, all three of all strong that are will." Col. B. thought Mr. Bartlett, Miss Joan Rosell, and Mr. Gilbert were all si nomine corjunct in making that are 'mill." Col. B. though Mr. Bartlett, Miss Joan Rosell, and Mr. Gilbert were all si nomine conduct in making the will now in issue.

Mr. Bentalke followed for the propocuter, reading as meta-minutes of the control of the proponents, reading the law applicable to the facts in the case. He relied strongly on the authority which holds that it requires so more capacity to make a will than a simple contract; and that where sufficient mental capacity is discovered for the latter pur-pose nothing more is required in making a will and devising property. He will conclude his ar-gument this morning, when Col. Atwood will follow on the other side.

The Dead Stranger. The Dead Stranger.

It seems that the body of the unknown man who died in the pail under the circumstances narrated in yesterday's paper, was buried in the Western cemetery, on Jefferson sireet, between Sixteenth and Eighteenth sireet a. About noon yesterday he was disinterized by the Coroner, and the features of the corpse recognized by Mr. St. John as those of a Mr. Bestley, of Richmond, Va., who had been employed by him at different unnes since last October. It is stranger that there was not a post-morten examination made before the man was curied, and that the body was not put into a vanit to give an opportunity to relatives or friends of the decised to icealify it. THE HOSPITAL. A Card from Rev. A. A. Morrison.

I searcely superied, the other day, when I penned the brief article in raisely city of the management of the City Hosotial, that I should subject myself to the catechism of two journals so distinguished as the Commercial and Ledger, with "Inquire" thrown in; and that coming upon a man of weak nerves in the moraling terre breakfast, might well be supposed quite stunning, provided such interrogatories had anyloing in them. But I have noting to reach a subject of the commercial, so far as the commissioners are concerned, I have not a word, They are all gentlemen, and fully competitude of the best of the commercial and interrogatories the commissioners are concerned, I have not a word, They are all gentlemen, and fully competitude of the best of the commercial and i guess those of the boginial kewise.

Some of the boginial kewise. "Those on the fraide of this hospital manuer latimate that the commercial of the boginial matter latimate that and wife." This is singly a faisebook, as I can demonstrate. Further, "that he consumes $8 worth of mediciaes per month." This is also haise, as can be proven by the hospital druggist.
